Astronaut talks about renewed shuttle program

KAREN SMITH
Features/Entertainment Editor

Nearly a year following the space shuttle disaster, NASA announced the Challenger program will fly again.

Five astronauts were chosen to participate in the mission to take place in February of 1988. Among them is Lt. Col. Richard D. Covey, who piloted the space shuttle in 1985 when two spacewalking astronauts repaired a damaged communications satellite.

"There were 85 people in office when the flight was announced, and we all had our hands up to go," Covey said. "That's what we're here for."

A faulty 'O' ring was the cause behind the space shuttle disaster in 1986, which killed seven crew members. Since that time, NASA has carefully scrutinized revisions for the program.

"Because of all the activities and design changes, I believe the next mission will be the safest yet," Covey said. "We have no real big concerns. It will be no more risky than any of the previous missions."

During the next 11 months, Covey and his four fellow crew members will undergo a series of training levels to prepare for the flight. "We'll spend eight to 10 hours a week for now in a proficiency level of training. The rest of our time will be spent in

"We want people to see that we have a crew, to let them meet us, and to show them that efforts are underway since the Challenger accident."

After graduation from the Air Force Academy in 1968, Covey received an Air Force Institute of Technology (AFIT) sponsored masters degree in astronautical engineering from Purdue University in 1969. AFIT is based at Wright Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton. Force Base in Dayton.

The son of an Air Force pilot, Covey traveled from base to base as a child, but said he calls Fort Walton Beach, Florida, his home. Even during his childhood, Covey knew what career path he would follow.

"From the time I was 14, when Alan Shepard and John Glenn went up, I decided I would like to do that. But I tell a lot of kids that saying it and thinking it are much different than doing it. It's a lot of work."

"I was fortunate enough to have the aptitude and talents to do the things I needed to do and to be selected for the job. However, it's a lot of being in the right place at the right time."

The first time Covey went into space, on the 1985 shuttle flight, he said he was "over-powered" by the amount of time, 90 minutes, it took to orbit the earth. "It sounds like a great task (to orbit the earth),

Bio classes 'evolve' into religion

The battle about whether to teach "creationism" in classrooms--usually fought in elementary and secondary schools--has surfaced at Northwest Missouri State University.

A group of NMSU students said a zoology professor is promoting his religious views in the classroom by lecturing about "creation science."

The students' protest, some observers said, could signal the beginning of a student backlash against creationists fighting to include their theory of the origins of life in college science classes.

No one knows how many colleges teach "creationism"--the biblical theory that life was created abruptly by a supreme being--but in recent years campus as diverse as San Francisco City College, Michigan State, Iowa State, Baylor, West Valley College in California, San Francisco State and Bryan College in Tennessee have supplemented biology programs with creationism teachings.

But at NMSU, some students want creationism kept out.

Students for Tolerance and Integrity in Rhetoric, a small but vocal NMSU group, contends Don Kangas is teaching the theory of evolution--the idea

Secretary of State Shultz told a House panel the U.S. Government is "deeply distressed" over the Jonathan Pollard spy case. Shultz said, "It is very disheartening to find Israel spying on the United States." The Secretary of State said he has ordered U.S. officials in Israel to shun the Israeli officer who worked with Pollard, a former navy analyst who is in jail for life for selling U.S. secrets.

In Israel, Prime minister Yitzhak Shamir has yielded to demands for an investigation of his country's role in the Pollard case. Israeli cabinet leaders yesterday decided to set up a two-person panel to recommend whether the Israeli government should take further action in the case.

The foreign trade deficit hit a record $38 billion during the last quarter of 1986. However, the volume of imports fell one percent during the October-December period, while export volume rose three percent.

They're not pickled; they're Oswald's

Herringbones make a big splash in the Rat

By KAREN SMITH

Features/Entertainment Editor

Unique, refreshing, entertaining and downright enjoyable.

That is the best description of the music of Oswald and the Herringbones, a rapidly growing band out of the grand city of Columbus.

In 1985 they won the QFM-96 Rock Wars, a six-month, 64-group battle of the bands contest sponsored by Columbus radio station WLVQ. But they were destined for even bigger and better things.

In December of 1986, Oswald and the Herringbones became the latest MTV Basement Tape winners. This national exposure gave the group the fuel it needed to begin its flight to the top.

The four member band consists of lead vocalists/guitarists Neal Havener and Michael Barone, drummer Stephen Sims and keyboardist/bassist Tom Boyer. Havener and Barone write most of the band's songs, and were the creators of "Be By Yourself", the tune that took them to victory with MTV and Q96.

Musical style is often hard to describe, and becomes even more difficult with a band like Oswald and the Herringbones, when consistency is not a factor. Diversity is the term for the selection of songs they have released. The songs range from upbeat dance songs to melodic ballads, and there is a little jazz, reggae and blues mixed in somewhere along the way.

"Be By Yourself" is a fresh, get-up-and-dance tune that best resembles a combination of Hooters and INXS. The result is a unique sound that just may carry Oswald and the Herringbones to the same or greater heights.

In January of 1986, Columbus Monthly magazine named Oswald and the Herringbones one of their "People to Watch in 1986". The magazine referred to the band's "collective heart", partly because when they won the Q96 Rock Wars, they donated $1000 of their winnings to Recreation Unlimited, a Columbus-based charity. Since then, Oswald and the Herringbones have appeared at numerous charity functions, including "Musicians Against MS" and the "March of Dimes Walk-America".

Each of the band members is a graduate of the Upper Arlington High School in Columbus Class of 1979, and their hometown roots keep them active in Ohio. They have appeared a number of times at Springfield's "Ruby Tuesdays".

Tomorrow night the band will be appearing in Wright State University's Rathskeller. The show will be at 8 p.m., and a WSU I.D. will be required for admission.

OHIO BRIEFS

(Akron, Ohio)—Akron health officials said a six-month-old girl has become one of the state's first reported cases of inherited AIDS. Officials said the infant was diagnosed late Tuesday as having Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, which destroys the body's ability to fight infection. More than 300 cases of AIDS had been reported in Ohio, and nearly 1,400 people have tested positive for the AIDS antibody. Officials estimate about 40% of those people will develop full-blown cases of AIDS, and 62% of the victims die in five to seven years.

Has the Hulkster turned the other cheek or has he gone wimp?

'Yes, Virginia, professional wrasslin is fake'

by SCOTT UZZEL

Staff Writer

B-O-R-I-N-G! B-O-R-I-N-G!

It was to be professional wrestling's finest hour in Dayton. The greatest card in the history of Hara Arena. Twenty-one bouts, featuring the biggest names in the World Wrestling Federation, being videotaped to air on television.

Instead, what transpired Tuesday night was a fiasco that made the last two Super Bores, or Bowls, compare favorably with the 1975 World Series. The main event, WWF World Champion Hulk Hogan (Ric Flair save us!) vs. Paul "Mr. Wonderful" Orndorff, was to have the added attraction of Rowdy Roddy Piper in Hogan's corner and Andre the Giant in Orndorff's corner. The prelude to Hogan's showdown with former ally Andre in Wrestlemania III, March 29.

There was a good build up to this, too. Earlier in the evening, Andre appeared on Piper's Pit and described how he planned to dismember Hogan at Wrestlemania.

But one must wonder if these mortal enemies kissed and made up in the locker room, for not only was Andre not in Orndorff's corner (Piper didn't show either), but when last seen leaving the arena, Andre and his manager Bobby "The Brain" Heenan were ducked low in a Holiday Inn van with—you guessed it—Hulk Hogan.

C'mon, Vince McMahon, give us a break! Hara Arena was completely sold out, and at $8 a head ($12 ringside) couldn't you afford a separate van for your main sideshow attractions?

What will all the little Hulksters think? After all, didn't Andre tear out their little hearts and souls (not to mention dollars and cents) when he tore the shirt and cross off the Hulkster?

And speaking of all the little Hulksters, how about keeping them at the arena well past 11 p.m. on a school night to get a glimpse of their hero who, according to the WWF, was making his first appearance in Dayton. (That wasn't quite true. Terry Bollea, I mean, Hulk Hogan, appeared here several years ago as heel Sterling Golden, but that was before Rocky III and the advent of Hulkamania.)

Not that most of the little

Bulksters minded the delay, but most of the adults in the audience were getting tired of waiting 10 minutes (and sometimes longer) between matches that lasted three to five minutes. Way to show courtesy to the fans, Vince.

And how about that Vince running some of the same wrestlers out there two or three times. Ha ha, what a card he is!

Imagine the thrill of watching the Honky Tonk Man wrestle twice in the same night! Or how about Universal Wrestling Federation transfer "Hacksaw" Jim Duggan vs. Nikolai Volkoff of the Soviet Union (evidently his home state of Maryland was under communist rule during the year of his birth), followed later by Duggan and a partner whose name escapes me vs. Volkoff and the Iron Sheik who, surprisingly enough, is actually from Iran. It's working so far, so, hey, why not send Duggan back out there for a singles match with the Sheik? Excuse the run-on sentences, but it was a run-on kind of night.

By the way, Vinnie—those little flashbulbs hanging from the ceiling to make all the folks out in television land think that everyone in the arena is madly snapping pictures of all the WWF wrestlers is a great idea!

As this is the last column on professional wrasslin, or any other subject, I will ever write for The Daily Guardian, I feel compelled to make the following statement.

I was always proud to be the man who brought professional wrasslin to the Wright State community. Whether you read my columns or listened to my tag team partner, Luscious Larry Beefcake, and me on WWSU-FM, you always got the latest news of the squared circle.

But after the travesty I witnessed in Hara Arena Tuesday night, I feel obligated to tell all you boys and girls and little Bulkamaniacs that, yes, Virginia, wrasslin is fake!

I'm going on record right now to say that I refuse to pay $15 to see Wrestlemania III on closed circuit TV and I am through, finished and even tired of professional wrasslin.

But have any of you ever watched Roller Derby? Now there's a sport! There's this team called the T-Birds and ...

Female college grads do usually get married

(CPS)—Women who graduate from college actually do stand a very good chance of getting married, the U.S. Census Bureau said.

Female college grads at age 25 have an 89.1% chance of marrying before they reach the age of 65, said the bureau's Jeanna Moorman, whose findings contradict a widely publicized study out of Yale and Harvard last year.

Some people, she added, have greeted her findings with a sense of relief.

A female doctoral student wrote to thank Moorman for disputing the Yale-Harvard study, which, she said, "set back women's desire for education 100 years."

The father of three women in their 30s called Moorman to thank her for setting his mind at ease.

David Bloom, one of the Yale-Harvard researchers, said he would not comment on Moorman's findings since he hadn't seen her report. The two other researchers on the project did not return a reporter's phone calls.

Moorman said her study is much more accurate than the Yale-Harvard forecast—which

Aid the Contras

Dear Editor:

The main reason why I am pro-contra aid is that the Sandinista Communists who the Contras are fighting against are a threat to our national security.

I have always said the only reason the Soviets are aiding the Sandinistas by giving them billions of dollars worth of weapons and lending them thousands of Soviet "advisors" is that there is something in it for them in their quest for world domination.

The Soviets may even go as far as to build an airstrip for their air force and/or a port for their navy, I said.

Well, it turns out they are doing both. (My sources: Washington Post, National Review). The port at El Bluff, when completed, will be able to handle every deep-water Soviet warship. The airstrip near the port is already big enough to handle every MiG fighter in the Soviet arsenal as well as Bear F and Bear H reconnaissance aircraft. When completed, this airstrip will be able to accommodate any aircraft from the Soviet inventory, including the strategic backfire bomber. This airstrip is a mere two hours flying time from the United States. This deadly threat cannot be tolerated.

We could knock out this airstrip with B-52's. However, U.S. pilots would then be put at risk. What if U.S. pilots are taken prisoner and tortured by the Sandinistas? Sending in a Delta Force rescue team may then lead to a deadly exchange of fire between U.S. and Soviet forces. We must continue to aid the Contras to put pressure on those who would otherwise threaten us. This is the easiest and most effective way.

'It is imperative we as students respond to this potential "crisis"'

Write your representative; save financial aid

Dear Editor:

In January, the Reagan administration proposed an 45% cut in federal student financial aid for the 1988 fiscal year. Although very unlikely to pass, this proposal has sent a message to Congress that cuts in higher education student financial aid are strongly desired.

Currently, the House and Senate Budget Committees are resolving their own proposals for higher education. In fact, they are expected to present their own resolutions this month!

Potential cuts may include large decreases in the money available for the college work study program, grants and student loans. In addition, it has been suggested that interest accumulated on loans during grace periods and payment of loans begin immediately after disbursement.

It is imperative we as students respond to this potential "crisis" at hand. We suggest you immediately write your congressional representatives and inform them of your opinions. Budget Committee members have been quoted as saying that there has been a lack of response from the "field" concerning this topic.

Our nation can ill-afford any cuts within the present student financial aid situation. Rising costs for our education are already compounded with the rising cost of living expenses and further complicated by the current federal minimum wage that most full-time students earn. Our nation tapped into a great reservoir of human potential with the passing of the Higher Education Act of 1965 which allows allocation of student financial aid. Certainly, we cannot afford to disenfranchise many of our nation's potential scholars, leaders, researchers and educators simply because they were not blessed by being born into a wealthy family or financially-stable environment.

Please consider this and take action NOW! Time is of the essence. Thank you.

Help WSU's parents

'Bring day-care to WSU and make it work'

Dear Editor:

A couple of weeks ago, my boss sent out a memo to the staff and students of the telecommunications department asking for our suggestions on the strategic plan for the department as part of the total planning process of the university.

My first response to enhancing the effectiveness of faculty, staff, and students was CAMPUS DAY-CARE. Requests for such a facility have been denied for many years, while every other university in Ohio has day-care. I don't believe I'm the only student who finds it difficult to swallow the results of the last two surveys taken on this issue.

Perhaps the administration hasn't considered or thoroughly checked into alternative methods to support and develop such a service. Why not incorporate day-care into the education department as part of its curriculum? Surely the study of child development is part of the education major. Cooperative education and work study could use campus day-care as another source of student employment. I'm not suggesting that bills for the service be footed entirely, if at all, by the university, but rather that the responsibility be distributed in such a way that all parties involved pay the price as well as reap the benefits.

Every parent on campus pays for this service off campus and deals with the many pressures and inconveniences it creates. Why not bring day-care to Wright State and make it work for everyone?

Truth or dare?

Excuses can't be made for academic dishonesty

by KRISTEN HUFF

I have been dared to print "the real truth" behind an issue of alleged academic dishonesty. (See letter to the editor below.)

Indeed, I am qualified to tell the truth--my truth not necessarily the truth Ms. Eve believes.

But before I do I must ask why Eve challenges me in the pages of The Daily Guardian to tell her and the rest of the university what she already knows I will say.

You see, I am a narc. An informant. A tattletale. I reported some people I saw cheating.

In an academic institution we are all at one time or another presented with an opportunity to students' native language. But simply being fluent in a language does not give a student the right to rifle through class notes, talk aloud and pass messages during a test.

Their argument was "Why would we cheat? This is our native language." To which I, and another professor, say if that is the case then you will never find a native English-speaker cheating in any non-foreign language classes at this university. That is ridiculous.

To me, knowing not to cheat is common sense as it was to a professor who told me his brother-in-law was expelled from a university for academic dishonesty.

Students used to be expected to perform on their honor. It is becoming more and more apparent to faculty and administrators at this school that that honor no longer means much. Academic dishonesty has been addressed by the Student Affairs Committee to Academic Council and a special subcommittee has been formed by Academic Council to look into the issue more closely.

But all of that does nothing for the accusations I am forced to defend myself against. Because I was raised not to cheat, I am called "immature" by my classmates. Because I wouldn't let anyone else cheat, either, I am "jealous." But, no matter, I intend to stand up for what I believe and am glad that when they were asked not every student in this class turned a back to what they saw.

For while truth may be beauty, it doesn't always set you free.

Cultural prejudice led to student's dismissal

Dear Editor:

Cultural prejudice is prevalent at this university! Not only are students participating in this degrading act, but also some of the professors! This attack must be due to the insecurity felt in the presence of foreigners.

To site an example, a foreigner was thrown out of a foreign language class that was her natural language. Why? Because the professor felt inadequate and some students felt inadequate AND jealous, also.

We dare the editor to print this letter and the real truth behind this incident!

cheat, whether it be through plagiarism (using someone else's thoughts or quotes as one's own) or collusion (getting help from someone else to write a paper or take a test).

Sometimes people cheat because they need an A. Other times its just for the thrill of getting away with it. But in either case it is dishonest and shows a lack of moral character.

It is true a student was asked to leave a foreign language class after I reported her and two other students for collaborating on a test. It is also true that the class was taught in the three said only 52% of the female college grads who were single and older than age 25 would marry by the time they reached 65--because she used a "life table" like the ones insurance companies do.

Moorman added the Yale-Harvard study didn't account for the fact that "the spread" around the average marrying age "is wider for college grads than it is for high school grads," she said.

"The Yale study," she explained, "assumed (the statistical curve for marrying) was the same for high school grads."

"High school graduates marry at an average age of 21, and college grads marry at about 24 but the college grads also marry at 26, 27 and well beyond," noted Moorman.

Moorman decided to research the problem after being asked repeatedly to verify the Yale group's findings.

Raider soccer team on top at indoor tourney

by DAVE CLARK
Sports Editor

The Wright State men's soccer team moved their action indoors this past weekend.

The Raiders, in conjunction with Budweiser, held the second annual WSU/Bud Indoor Invitational.

The Raiders came out on top, defeating many of this region's finest collegiate soccer teams and an amateur squad to garner the championship.

WSU lost only one game all day, a 2-0 loss to Charlie's Import--an amateur squad with a healthy list of former Raider players on it.

During the final's round, Raider goalkeeper Sherman Mink did not allow a goal a goal, as the Raiders swept past Miami and Ohio Wesleyan before gaining revenge on Charlie's Import in the championship match, 2-0.

For his performance, Mink joined teammates Dave Kinderdine and Jeff Popp on the all-tournament squad, which also included former WSU standout Rob Campbell from Charlie's Import.

"Something like this is a lot of fun," Raider head coach Greg Andrulis said. "There wasn't a great deal of pressure of the guys, but this is a good mid-year barometer for us to judge our progress by.

"What was so different about this tournament was that we found ways to win. During the regular season, we were finding ways not to lose. This is an important step for us.

"We ended our indoor season with a win, but more importantly, we saw many of our younger players mature rapidly since the fall. We are playing at a higher level now. We spent more time and energy preparing ourselves for this, and we worked hard. We worked harder than any other team in the tournament, and it showed in our victories."

Creationism

that humans developed from simpler life forms--side-by-side with the biblical theory of creation, which they say belongs in a religion or philosophy class.

"I don't like it," says NMSU freshman Amy Stern. "I am a Christian and do go to church, but religion doesn't play any part in zoology."

Kangas said he isn't teaching creationism in his zoology class, though he warns his students he believes in creationism.

"I teach what I know for sure," he said. "I believe in microevolution, for instance, which involves changes in organisms through natural selection.

"But regarding man's origins, most (evolutionary) literature is about as close to false as possible. Evolution at the species level, the lowest level of organism classification, is probably possible, but the evidence for evolution in the higher classes is very poor."

"A number of students are not comfortable with this teaching," counters Paul Mineo, a NMSU biology professor and STIR's sponsor. "They are afraid the teaching of creationism as a science will be enforced.

"Some students on some campuses are becoming willing to protest those kinds of sentiments."

STIR members now want to stage a campus debate reminiscent of the 1925 Scopes "Monkey Trial," which pitted Clarence Darrow against William Jennings Bryan in a court test of whether teaching evolution was a crime.

Mineo wants to be careful in staging the debate. "This is an extremely sensitive situation involving freedom of speech, academic freedom and censorship."

But his adamance in keeping creationism out of college classes isn't unique.

"Every reputable scientific and educational association has come out against teaching creationism as a science," said William Mayer, biology professor emeritus at the University of Colorado and former head of the National Association of Biology Teachers.

"That's the key. If you're teaching it as religion or philosophy, that's fine. But if you're going to insist one religion be taught, you must teach all religions."

Mayer contends no scientific evidence supports the creation theory, and that research in the field is negligible.

GUARDIAN."

you're 150 to 200 miles above the earth, it's an overpowering sensation. The world seems so much smaller than when you are earth-bound."

Covey said he couldn't imagine the potential for future space travel. "I liken that to the fact that 20 years ago, no one would have imagined the space shuttle. Our only limitations will be the commitment of the country and the limited resources to that end. Things have to be put into perspective; there is money going into the space program, but there has to be a give and take to make the program work.

"We may not be able to go as far as quickly as we want, but there will be no limitation to the technological end (of advancement). Space is where much of the country's, of the world's, future lies. I think it will return benefits for our efforts."

For the next shuttle mission, Covey said they would be concentrating on "just a simple mission, doing things right and showing the people we can do it."

"I think our space program has become stronger," Covey said. "With the actions taken by NASA since the accident, I feel positive about the changes in personnel and in the safety precautions. They are all very heartening signs.

"We can become better and stronger than we ever could have been before. The agency (NASA) has undergone some soul searching, they've recognized what they can do."

Covey offered sound advice to college students who are interested in pursuing careers in the astronautical field.

"I encourage the study of science and engineering as well as aviation. Space flight and aviation have great parallels, and when NASA makes their selections for space program participants, they favor a background in aviation."
